

Good behaviour involves being aware of your own behaviour, knowing what is acceptable and taking responsibility for your own actions.

Good behaviour includes:

- Acting responsibly and conducting yourself in a professional manner
- Being honest and acting with integrity
- Being considerate and courteous towards others
- Behaving in a respectful manner towards others so that they do not feel that they as individuals, or others around them, are being harassed or bullied
- Cooperating with University staff in ensuring a safe and healthy on-campus and online environment
- Applying yourself conscientiously to your programme of study
- Abiding by the University's Student Charter, policies and procedures
- Abiding by the law

Good behaviour is essential to what it means to be a University of Law student. Students are expected to exhibit good standards of behaviour when interacting with other members of the

This is not an exhaustive list and more detailed information can be found in the

The behaviours described may also come within other procedures such as the which outlines the University's position on bullying and harassment

- which sets out the rules for use of the University's computing facilities
- which aims to ensure students use social media ethically and legally and sets out the implications of the misuse of social media
- which sets out expectations for the use of library services
- which aims to ensure that those involved in undertaking research are compliant with legal, regulatory and institutional principles

Reports of unacceptable behaviour or wellbeing concerns can